There was once a prince who owned a very beautiful estate. A grand palace with columns and domes of white marble stood in the center. Fine large trees waved their happy boughs all about it. Glancing fountains sprung up in the gardens as if they loved the sky. Smiling little streams wandered among rare and fragrant flowers, and it was hard to tell which sung the sweetest, they or the gay birds whose music was not still all the day long. But the most beautiful thing of all was a wall of pure crystal, without a flaw or a stain, that stood around the whole. Just beyond these palace grounds were barren mountains, and the prince could hear sometimes the howling of wild beasts among the rocks, which prowling at nightfall, would come and gnash and scratch and beat against the crystal wall. But they never could come near him, and the glimpses he caught of the unconth monsters through the transparent crystal would have frightened him terribly, unless he had known that his wall was so strong and firm that he was safe.

And sometimes there were fearful tempests out side the palace grounds, and thunder and lightnings, and foul birds scared from their nests flew through the black air with strange streams, and the withered boughs crashed in the deep wild woods. But storms never came within the crystal wall. By day all was peace, and the sun shone in splendor from his rising till he went down behind the purple hills; and at night the stars flashed like jewels in the clear sky, and peace and tender sleep came in at the palace

But by and by the prince began to grow inquiet and dull and lonesome. He used to walk along close by the wall, and almost wish that he might go out to seek adventures beyond, and grew almost weary of the restraint. Yet he could not tell what there was to desire that was not already his. Only his impatience at always knowing that beyond his crystal wall all was an unknown and forbidden land to him, disturbed his happiness and gave him a great deal of trouble.

One day as he was walking in a path far away from the marble palace, and gazing through the limpid wall, and wondering why he could not be at liberty to go out and scale the high mountains and see what lay beyond them, he saw a strange sight. A little animal with a head something like a snake's and a thin body something like a weasel's, was digging the earth close by the wall, but upon the outer side, as if it tried to get into the garden. At first the prince was sadly alarmed, and ran away towards the palace. But the next day and the next, for all that week, he found himself still straying toward that part of the inclosure, and looking with more and more interest at the toil of the creature, and wondering much how he could ever have felt any alarm from what he was coming to think a harmless and not a very ugly little animal. At length, one day when he had watched it for some time, and seen how constantly it labored, and yet how it seemed to make no progress, almost without thinking, he picked up a stone to break away a place in the wall. But he must have struck a harder blow than he meant to, for a pretty large piece came out, and through the hole the creature quickly ran to hide itself behind a bunch of weeds which grew near-for there were some weeds in the garden. Then the prince knew how very, very wrong he had done, and you may suppose he was a good deal frightened. He sat down on the grass and cried for some time, and then went to look for the animal to drive it out again. But it had burrowed a hole in the soil, and he knew he could not get it without much trouble. And the more he waited and thought about it, the more inclined he was to let it stay.

So, finally, he made up his mind to do so, but thought he would stop up the breach in the crystal wall. Then he took sods and stones, and thrust them in, and learned a large stone against the place. The next day he came to look at it, and found the sods had all fallen out, and was shocked to see how the wall had crumbled away and how much larger, also, the hole was. Every day when he came to look at it, it had become larger than it had been, still crumbling, crumbling away, until he no longer felt any surprise or alarm at it.

But one night as he lay on his bed the prince heard a storm beating and driving against the crystal wall as he had never heard before, and whenever the storm was still, the fierce beasts howled and yelled in a frightful manner. Then of a sudden, there came a tremendous crash, and he knew the crystal wall had

Where the palace and the lovely garden were, there is now a desert wilderness. Where the flowers and the brooks and the fountains were, are now the lairs of beasts of prey. And unclean birds croak in the branches which once swung to the sweet music of

The Hudson's Bay Company.

We copy the following interesting article from the New York Courier and Enquirer, in relation to the formation and present position of the company:

In the year 1668, a small band of adventurous voyagers, with one Grosseliez, a Frenchman, for their chief, in a vessel fitted out by Prince Rupert, of England, ascended from the south side of Hudson's Bay, in British North America, a river then called the Nomisco, but afterwards Rupert, and found a tract of country tenanted by furred animals of great value. They returned to England. Their report was favorably received, and a company called the Hud-son's Bay Company was immediately formed for the purpose of commencing a traffic in furs. To this Company, in 1670, Charles 11, granted a charter of incorporation, giving to the Company full possession of all the territories upon the "countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds," that lie within the entrance of "Hudson Straits," and not previously granted to any other of his subjects, or possessed by any other State. It was a sweeping charter, and gave an immense hunting ground to the Company. Settlements were immediately formed on several rivers, and the Company went to work trading with the Indian hunters. They prospered. The French government, to which Grosseliez had originally suggested the idea of such settlements, but which had turned a deaf ear to him, saw the prospects of the Hudson's Bay Company, repented of their neglect, detached Grosseliez from the English service, founded a rival settlement, and henceforth there was war between the English and French Companies.

After much rivalry and much bloodshed, the French Company, called the North-West Company, and the Hudson's Bay Company, became united, and have continued so under several charters from the British Government, the last one of which expires in 1859. Since the formation of the Company until the present time, the tract of territory granted by charter, roughly estimated at 4,000,000 of square miles, has been and is now kept as an immense imperial hunting preserve, the huntsmen being the aboriginal Indians, and the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company the keepers. The Government has been, and is nearly a perfect depotism . under which a gigantic commercial menopoly shuts out by the trade of savres the le itimate demands of the trade of white men and the advances of commercial civilization Thus standing an enomaly of commore in the progressive commercial world around it, the Hudson's Bay Company, from the fact that its charter is about expiring, and from the fact that its presence overshadows Canada, and is on the soil of the United States, has attracted the particular attention of the two latter countries towards it. A year ago, President Pierce, in his Message, referred to the misuader. standing existing as to the possessory rights of the Company on the soil of the United States, and spoke of the cession of its rights reserved to it by the Oregon treaty, as the readiest means of terminating all difficulties. We have now accounts that the Toronto Board of Trade have also turned their attention towards the Company as it stands in reference to Canada. On the 4th instant, the Board held a meeting with a view of affording an opportunity to certain gentlemen, long residents of the Hudson's Bay Territory, to call attention to the advantages of opening a direct commercial intercourse with that extensive field of enterprise. The meeting was we'l attended and many interesting statements were made. It was stated that the Hudson's Bay Territories comprised "several vast regions as large as Canada in extent, and not inferior to her soil, and in all the requisites for forming a nation, and it was contended that the whole of that tract of country was properly Canada. It originally was New France or Canada, and was still Canada, having been conveyed as such to England by Treaty in 1762. But the Hudson's Bay Company now exclusively occupied it, prohibiting immigration and agriculture, and almost every attempt to improve it. It was a country the produce of which ought naturally to pass through Canada hands. At one time its products passed through Canada and enriched Montreal. This was in the time of the Northwest Company; but on the union of the two Companies the trade was again diverted, and all the products were made to pass by way of Hudson's Bay to England. The very furs purchased in Toronto, were got, perhaps, only ninety miles distant, at Penetanguishene, whence they were sent to Lake Huron, and then to Hudson's Bay, and so to England, Canadian merchants purchasing them in London and bringing them back to Toronto. The stockholders in the company were amassing a great deal of wealth from the moropoly they usurped. Their trade sales, in March last, amounted to £450,000. What their sales were elsewhere it was impossible to say, as they were not in the habit of communicating much information about their affairs to the public. The history of the fur trade was coëval with the history of Canada, and it only required an acquaintance with it to be satisfied that the company had no title to the exclusive rights and privileges they now claimed." It was argued, therefore, that the Hudson's Bay Territory should be claimed as being properly Canada, and it was suggested that instead of the slow method of appealing to the British Government, a company like the old Northwest company should be formed to contend against the Hudson's Bay Company, even as the old Northwest Company successfully con-The meeting finally resolved, "That the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company to exclusive right of trade over a large portion of British North America, is injurious to the interest of the country so monopolized, and in contravention of the rights of the people of the British North American Provinces," and that "a petition from the Board of Trade be prepared and presented to the three branches of the Canadian Legislature, praying that steps be taken to ascertain what are the legal rights of the Hudson's Bay Company to the territory and exclusive trade claimed by that company in the northern part of this continent, and to pray them to adopt such measures as may be necessary to protect the rights of the Province."

RUSSIA ON THE AMOOR .- The river Amoor, in northeastern Asia, which the Russians have taken possession of, is seven hundred and fifty miles in length. Before the seizure of the lower part, the limit of the Russian dominion on the south was in latitude fifty-seven degrees seven minutes. Its navigation is safe and easy, but does not last long, as the sea of Ochotsk, into which it empties, is frozen up five months in the year, say from November to April. The scientific commission sent out by the Emperor Nicholas ascended the Amoor above the point where it entered Siberia, and discovered that its banks were covered with magnificent forests, minerals, vegetables and animals. Since the close of the last war it has been understood that the Russian ships, now in harbor at Cronstadt, are to be sent into the sea of Ochotsk, whence they will proceed to navigate the Amoor, for the purpose of hydrographical geography.

wrecked at the Scilly Islands, the sum of 3101 sovereigns. 2d, That when the Rob Roy was wrecked on the Navigator Islands, said Ruxton declared that he had not saved more than 421 sovereigns out 3101 formerly taken, of which fact there is great doubt, since a great number of articles of smaller value were saved 3d, That it is suspected that said Ruxton has embezzled, for his own profit, a part of the sum saved from the Julia Ann.

wrecked a second time with the Rob Roy;—
The "Commandant Particular," Commissioner of H. I. M in the Society Islands, has ordered that an inquest be made by the Justice of Peace, acting ad interim as Judge of Instruction, upon the facts above stated. From said inquest, during which Mr. Charlton, second in command of the Rob Roy, did not appear, by reason of absence, neither the crew, and whose testimony was very important, it That said Ruxton made, at Sydney, excessive expenses, out of propertion with his situation and with what he was known to possess when he left Tahiti. That, in answer to one of the witnesses inquiring from him how he was able to spend so freely, he declared that he had re ceived money as assistance from a Scotch society named That, after the demise of said Ruxton, 69 sovereigns and four dollars, as well as some goods and jewelry, were found in his possession, the origin of which cannot be explained. In consequence, the Commissioner of H. I. M. has decided that the present abstract should be published in the official newspaper, so that all interested parties may present their claims upon the succession of said Ruxton, delivered into the
